CHICAGO MARATHON PARTIES ON WITH INCREASED SECURITY

SAFE AND SWIFT

A record number of runners participated in Sunday's marathon. JOSE M. OSORIO/TRIBUNE PHOTOS

Chicago Tribune

The Bank of America Chicago Marathon was run without incident Sunday as tighter but by no means suffocating security did little to scare off runners or subdue the raucous street party bubbling along the 26.2-mile racecourse.

Police and event organizers instituted new safety measures after the bombings that marred April's Boston Marathon, but the essential character of the race remained unchanged. Some runners and spectators said they were grateful for the heightened scrutiny, while others said they barely noticed it.

"It's good that you don't see the presence because that makes people uncomfortable," said Kelly Kane, who was cheering on runners in Old Town with few uniformed police officers in sight.

As of Sunday evening, Chicago police had reported no arrests or serious trouble during the bright and brisk morning. George Chiampas, the race's medical director, said 750 people requested medical attention and 26 were transported to hospitals, though none appeared to be critical.

The marathon's safeguards were evident before the race even began, with a sign near the runners' check-in cautioning participants not to wear "costumes covering the face or non-formfitting bulky outfits."

Runners had to carry their belongings in clear plastic bags provided by race organizers, and police set up watchtowers near Buckingham Fountain to keep an eye on the record 40,230 athletes assembling in Grant Park.

Shannon Seiferth, of Chicago, said she had thought about the Boston bombings before arriving at the starting gate but had full confidence that she would be safe.

"I think the security measures are in place, and I think people are going to be on high alert," she said.

Dathan Ritzenhein, of Portland, Ore., the fifth-place finisher who was tops among American men, said that even with the heightened sense of vigilance, this year's marathon was better than ever.

"I don't think what happened in Boston has had a negative effect," he said. "Maybe it has had a positive effect. It has brought the running community a little closer."

And the winners were ...

RedEye cover curse? Not a chance! Tatyana McFadden, the University of Illinois student who was on Friday's cover, won the women's wheelchair race Sunday—just 3 seconds ahead of Manuela Schär of Switzerland—earning $10,000 for the win plus another $5,000 for breaking the course record.

Her winning time, 1 hour, 42 minutes, 35 seconds, took 1:54 off the 21-year-old course record set by Ann Morris.

"I think I just tested my body today," she said. "I needed to go 110 percent."

McFadden wasn't the only one to break records.

Dennis Kimetto of Kenya won the men's race with a time of 2:03:45, breaking the record set last year of 2:04:38.

Rita Jeptoo of Kenya won the women's race in 2:19:57, and South African Ernst van Dyk won the men's wheelchair race in 1:30:37. TRIBUNE, REDEYE

Debt problem won't end well

Stephen Markley

redeye@tribune.com
@stephenmarkley

Barack Obama's presidency has largely been defined by crisis. He entered the White House following an unprecedented economic meltdown, and events such as the BP oil spill, Hurricane Sandy and Syria's use of chemical weapons will be mere footnotes in the range of political, economic and natural disasters that have landed on his plate. However, the crisis which has defined his presidency and which will almost certainly come to define at least the next decade of American politics is the crisis within the Republican Party.

Normally, I don't like to freak people out on a Monday morning, but I'll bet the U.S. government will default on its debt and trigger a wide-ranging global economic calamity. Maybe not today, maybe not tomorrow, but it will happen within the decade.

Republicanism, in the age of Obama, has left planet Earth. Already a political faction deeply in hock to the corporate-lobbyist-industrial super-complex, in 2010 it was infused with a new strain of uncompromising fanaticism. In the words of former Republican operative Mike Lofgren, the GOP has become "an apocalyptic cult."

The most obvious and frightening manifestation of this has been the weaponization of the debt ceiling. This vestigial bit of parliamentary trivia has now become an economic suicide bomb carried by the dead-enders of the Republican Party in order to enact an agenda that the American people will never vote for (because, let's be clear, that agenda is insane).

Eventually, they will set it off.

Obama made a serious misstep in 2011 when he allowed himself to be subjected to a shakedown. Now he and every Democratic president for the foreseeable future will be subject to the same shakedown. What began with Newt Gingrich's machinations against Bill Clinton will continue to escalate. Due to gerrymandering, demographic sorting and a primary system that rewards the farthest of the far right, the whack-job wing of the GOP will be able to wag the dog, even though it's unlikely Republicans will win a national presidential election because of changing demographics and their terminal unpopularity among voters.

Obama and the Democrats cannot give in because it will encourage the hostage-takers to attempt future grander, scarier hostage stand-offs. A growing faction of the Republicans won't give in because they are the aforementioned apocalyptic cult weeding out everyone but True Believers.

During the 2012 Republican presidential primary, I wrote an essay called "The Great Dismorphia" describing the phenomenon of the asymmetric polarization in conservatism (while tripping on shrooms!). Looking back at it now, however, I probably wasn't pessimistic enough.

Human civilization faces serious existential challenges. I'll watch Sen. Ted Cruz and think about how in less than four decades there will be 9 billion people on an overheating planet that's running out of drinkable water. One might think we'd focus on some of those issues, but instead we have a mainstream political party threatening a global economic catastrophe to keep people from getting health insurance. The point being that the Great Dismorphia is now its own separate existential crisis.

And this brand of paranoid, unreconstructed political millennialism? It's not a serious response to the world we live in. It's a clown show with a bomb strapped to its chest.

A NEW SCENIC ROUTE

ROADWAY WINDS THROUGH HIDDEN PART OF CHICAGO

Chicago Tribune

The South Lake Shore Drive extension, Chicago's newest roadway, is less than two weeks away from opening along a part of the city that for more than 100 years most people have seen only from a distance.

It has been 21 years since the blast furnaces at U.S. Steel Corp.'s massive South Works plant went silent. But the cyclone fences that have cordoned off the roughly 600-acre site—larger than the Loop—are about to come down.

Removal of the barriers on the old USX property will clear the way for thousands of drivers and many bicyclists each day to use the roughly 2-mile extension of South Lake Shore Drive from just south of Rainbow Beach, at 79th Street and South Shore Drive, to 92nd Street at Ewing Avenue, near the Calumet River. It is also marked as the relocated U.S. Highway 41.

The road's opening also will provide the key piece of infrastructure that for years has been missing from far-reaching plans to develop an area that has been approved to include up to about 18,000 residents, beaches and marinas and 25 million square feet of retail, commercial and research facilities.

The South Lake Shore Drive extension is scheduled to open Oct. 27, according to the Illinois and Chicago departments of transportation, which worked on the $64 million project that began in April 2012.

The 30 mph speed limit on the new roadway is less than the 40 mph limit on the rest of Lake Shore Drive. The south extension is designed to function as an arterial street, project managers said, with the added aesthetics of a landscaped-median boulevard and stunning views of Lake Michigan. Almost 600 trees have been planted, officials said.

The extension runs two lanes in each direction and includes a bicycle lane in each direction between 79th and 87th streets and shared vehicle-bike lanes south of 87th, officials said.

In addition, locations have been set aside for future parking when the largest undeveloped parcel in Chicago is built out.

NEXT HOT 'HOOD?

Transportation officials, South Chicago residents and real estate developers are banking on the South Lake Shore Drive extension fostering a rebirth of Chicago's far south lakefront. Real estate developer Dan McCaffery is pitching the site as the future home of the Barack Obama presidential library.

Deadline looms over fiscal negotiations

WASHINGTON Senate negotiations to bring a boiling fiscal crisis to an end showed signs of progress Sunday, but there were no guarantees that the federal government shutdown was about to end or that a historic default would be avoided.

Friday's optimism that a deal might be forged before financial markets opened Monday vanished Saturday, and the talks moved from the acrimony of the House of Representatives to the Senate.

Negotiations that were likely to stretch into the week continued between the Senate's top Democrat and Republican.

Underscoring the urgency of resolving the impasse, both the Senate and House are scheduled to be in session Monday, even though it is the Columbus Day federal holiday.

However, whatever deal the Senate might reach will still have to return for approval by the House, where the Republican majority faces strong pressure from its vocal conservative flank not to make any concessions to President Obama and the Democrats.

TOURISTS WELCOME

The Statue of Liberty, shuttered by the federal government shutdown, reopened to visitors Sunday morning after New York State agreed to give money to the National Park Service to pay its workers to be there. It was one of 10 other national parks and monuments to reopen under similar deals with state governments, the National Park Service said, including the Grand Canyon National Park in Arizona.

Given that, hopes for forcing a conclusion before the Treasury reaches its debt ceiling on Thursday and runs out of authority to borrow may hinge in part on fear of tumbling investor confidence.

On Saturday, House Speaker John Boehner informed his rank-and-file that the negotiations with the White House had collapsed. The focus moved to the Senate, which held a rare Sunday session with lawmakers delivering speeches about the prolonged standoff to an empty chamber.

Dozens die in stampede

A stampede at a bridge leading to a remote Hindu temple in central India on Sunday killed at least 89 people and injured more than 100, police said. Nearly 150,000 devotees gathered to celebrate the holy festival of Dussehra at the Ratangarh temple.

American dies in Egypt prison

A U.S. citizen was found dead in an Egyptian prison Sunday in an apparent suicide six weeks after he was arrested for breaking a curfew, security sources said. At the time of James Henry Lunn's arrest, security sources said he was on his way to Gaza.

Iran rebuffs nuke demand

Iran on Sunday rejected the West's demand that it send sensitive nuclear material out of the country but signaled flexibility on other aspects of its atomic activities that worry world powers, ahead of renewed negotiations this week.

Eiffel Tower evacuated

The Eiffel Tower was completely evacuated Sunday following a threatening phone call, according to a Paris police official. The 1,062-foot iron tower was evacuated around 3 p.m., and the sector around it was fully cleared, the police official said.

Steve Bartman (middle) and Moises Alou reach for a foul ball in Game 6.

NO CURSING

Pssst. Guess what? It's been 10 years since the Steve Bartman incident

Ten years ago Monday, fans came as close to seeing the Cubs in the World Series as they'd been in six decades. Then the eighth inning of Game 6 in the National League Championship Series happened, setting off a catastrophic chapter in Chicago sports history.

Why relive the Bartman game? Because it's a "where were you when ..." moment. Whether you blame him to this day or believe he was a victim of overreaction, you've got an opinion. And even though it knocked Cubs fans down, they just keep getting back up.

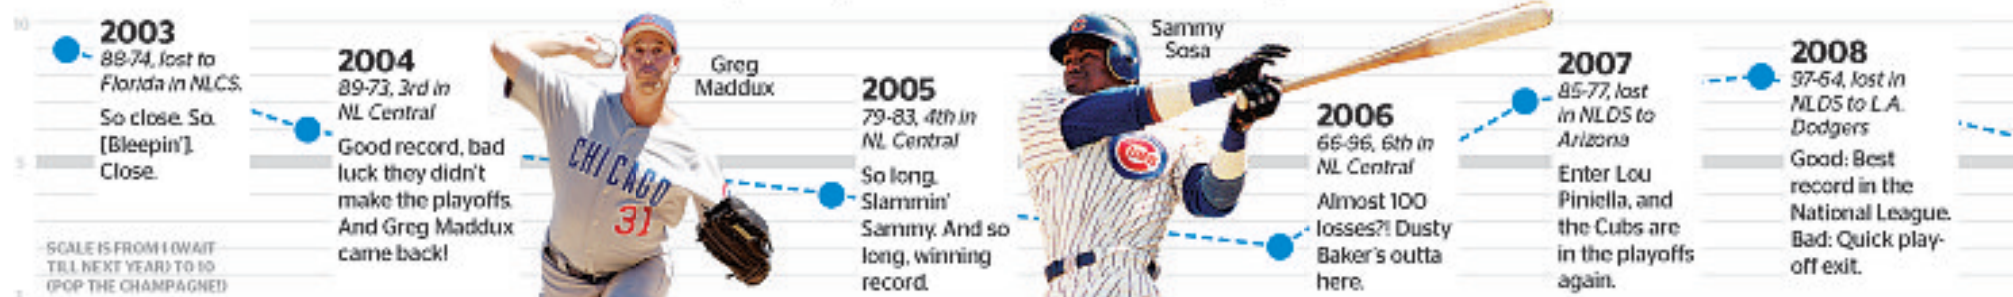

Which makes this the perfect time to check in with those who lived it. Not only because it's a key moment in Cubs lore, but because it gives everyone a chance to ask: With the Cubs so far away from winning it all, do you still believe? REDEYE

NOT JUST ONE PITCH

By Jack M. Silverstein
FOR REDEYE

RedEye spoke with Mark Prior and Paul Bako, the Cubs' starting pitcher and catcher, respectively, for a breakdown of that fateful eighth inning, starting with the Cubs up 3-0.

BAKO: Off the bat [the Bartman ball] looks like it's going to be a foul ball. But Mo's gonna catch it. If he was going to run after a ball and make a play on it and jump like he did, he had a very good chance of making it.

PRIOR: Moises definitely had a play on the ball. He probably would have caught it. But it was a foul ball. I didn't think much of it, other than like, "He should have caught that. A fan got in the way."

PRIOR: I had him 0-2. If I had anything to regret or be upset about, it was that 0-2 pitch. Not the pitch itself, [but] the execution of it. 0-2, it's got to be in the dirt no matter what. No questions asked. And I just spun it up there. It was sitting on a tee for him. That was a mental and physical mistake by me, and that cost us the first run, which probably led to the chain reaction.

5th batter: Miguel Cabrera hits a ground ball to shortstop. Alex Gonzalez bobbles it, and everyone's safe.

PRIOR: It wasn't a great pitch, but it was a pitch we were looking for. He hit a ground ball to short. It was exactly what we needed. And, you know, he dropped the ball. So not only did we not get a double play, but we didn't get one out.

6th batter: Derrek Lee doubles to left. Game tied at 3. Kyle Farnsworth relieves Prior.
PRIOR: I threw a pretty good pitch to the next batter. And to this day I still think he—it was 95 on the inside part of the plate. He had to be looking for it because he turned on it, and that's what scored the next run.

7th batter: Mike Lowell, intentional walk.

BAKO: After Mordecai hit that double, I remember standing at home plate and the only thing I could hear in the whole stadium was the Marlins' voices in their dugout celebrating. I'm not exaggerating. I couldn't hear anything else other than their voices. Twelve, 15 minutes before that, you couldn't hear yourself think, just because of the energy and enthusiasm. [Sighs.] It was the definition of a 180. It was just crazy, crazy, eerily quiet after that hit.

11th batter: Juan Pierre singles to left. 8-3 Marlins.

12th batter: Luis Castillo pops out to second base. Inning over.
BAKO: Man, [when the inning ended], I would say we were as shocked and awed as the crowd was. The competitor in you is like, "Let's go, boys. We have six outs left to score. We can win this. We've done it before." But the reality is like, "Hopefully we can shake this off and come back tomorrow ready to play." As soon as the game's over, that's what we're thinking. It was as bad a feeling as I've had from a game.

1	What are you doing to mark the 10-year Bartman anniversary?	Making spaghetti sauce out of a 16-inch softball! "tastes sauce" Well, that tastes horrible.	Hoping he's on a tropical vacation and won't have to see the millionth rehashing of that day.	Finding Alex Gonzalez and punching him in the stomach for not turning the double play! I was there, man!	Punching everyone who blames him for the Cubs' collapse in the throat. Then kicking Alex Gonzalez.	Prior to now, it's a bit Dusty in my mind. Five outs away, I had Wood. Now, a memory I'd like to bid Alou.
2	How would you recover after running the Chicago Marathon?	New legs? Can they do new leg transplants? Something with a nicely defined calf muscle?	I'm still running it. Writing this from mile 19. I'm at a steady crawl.	Are you nuts? Why would a beer drinker run the marathon?	By waking up and realizing it was all a glorious, delusional dream.	I'd go for a sprint. Just so I can say, "It's not a marathon, but a sprint."
3	The best way for the Bears to fix their defense is be patient. We waited 60-plus years for a consistent offense, so this is nothing.	... allow the other team fewer points. That's a sure fix.	First, score more points because we have no defense. Second, Ditka. Third, get defensive tackles. Fourth asking opposing teams to put fewer offensive players on the field. Pretty please?	... sign Kris Jenner. She's a free agent and into tackling a bunch of young guys.
4	Without the Bears playing Sunday, what did you do differently?	Started pregameing for Florida State-Clemson. Yes, I know it's not until next Saturday.	Worked out, cleaned, saw my family. Haha, just kidding. Red Zone and beer.	I usually do a show with Dan Hampton yelling at me on WGN radio. This week my wife yelled at me at home.	Continued my Jedi training, which you can read about at facebook.com/jeditrainingchallenge.	Drank heavily, lost money on games and dominated fantasy football. So the answer is, I didn't watch a Bears game.
5	Derrick Rose has left knee soreness. How worried are you?	"puts fingers in ears" Lalalalalalalalala I can't hear you, he'll be fine lalalalalalalala	On a scale of 1 to 10? Eleventeen.	On the worried/happy continuum of life, 10 being happy ... I'm at a minus-20, crying in a dark corner.	That depends. Are his agent and brother holding him out another year?	Call it a little Chicago revenge after Rio took our Olympics. No Rose for you!

TRACY'S TREK

CINCINNATI 27, BUFFALO 24 (OT)

Bills, Bills, Bills. First of all, the Bills' stadium is not in Buffalo. It's in Orchard Park, a suburb of Buffalo. So it's the outskirts of the middle of nowhere. The stadium has '70s vibe and reminds me of a college stadium because it did not feel large. Food and drink options are abysmal. Still, tickets were cheap and the fans were spirited and friendly—until the overtime loss. Then the mouths seemed bigger than the stadium. Five stadiums to go!

Key word: 'minor'

Take a breath, Bulls fans. The first NBA game in South America delivered the first hiccup in Derrick Rose's return. The Bulls held Rose out of their 83-81 exhibition victory over the Wizards in Rio De Janeiro on Saturday with left knee soreness that team officials termed "minor."

What did you say?!

There are loud stadiums, and then there's what the fans at Kansas City's Arrowhead Stadium did in the fourth quarter of the Chiefs' 24-7 win over Oakland on Sunday. A Guinness World Record official on site pegged the noise at 137.5 decibels, the loudest crowd roar on record at an open-air stadium.

Earl Sweatshirt enjoys the uncomfortable, and he's learning to handle the spotlight

By Andy Downing | FOR REDEYE

Throughout Earl Sweatshirt's major-label debut, "Doris," the Odd Future rapper struggles to come to terms with the spotlight he's been under since returning from Coral Reef Academy—a retreat for at-risk boys outside the Samoan capital where he was sent by his mother in mid-2012.

Earl's disappearance, which somehow remained a mystery for months and even inspired a "Free Earl" campaign amid Odd Future's growing legions, coincided with the crew's public coronation. The rapper's return was trumpeted as one of the year's most anticipated musical comebacks, which might explain, in part, why he started to show signs of cracking under pressure.

"My priorities [bleeped] up, I know it/Afraid I'm going to blow it," he rhymes on the low-key "Burgundy." "And when them expectations raising because daddy was a poet."

Even now the Los Angeles rapper, born Thebe Kgositsile 19 years ago, still is adjusting to fame. "Since I got home there's a set of things I can't do unless I want to be really annoyed while I'm doing it, so I kind of just stopped doing everything," he said. "I'm not a fan of attention. Well, sometimes, but not when I'm eating or going to concerts or just looking at something."

He is, however, a fan of literature (the avowed bookworm said he's nearly finished with the autobiography of Black Panther activist Assata Shakur), a trait he inherited from his father, South African poet Keorapetse, and his law professor mother, Cheryl. That's one of many topics he touched on in a recent phone interview.

Earl unpacks years of emotional baggage! feel like a turning point for you musically?

Yeah, man, that was a real turning point for me because that was the first time I was fully transparent on a song and I fully articulated an idea I wanted to get across. I was used to just saying whatever the [bleep] came to my head whether or not it made sense. I think it was just something that had to get done. I didn't necessarily drop my guard, but it was like I fully concentrated for once.

Near the end of that track you say "back a week and I already feel like calling it quits." What keeps you motivated to continue doing this?

That was like a year ago when I first got back and everything was really overwhelming. That was just a song for that period of time. Now I have a lot of fun. It's tight, dude. I'm 19 and I get to have an apartment and do some [bleep] that is not work at all. Rappers get paid to smoke weed and complain.

Can you still relate to that 15-year-old kid who rapped about murder and rape?

Yeah, I feel him, but not in the same way. I think I'm going back to not the same [bleep] I was rapping about, but just the way I was doing it.

I'm comfortable doing music again.

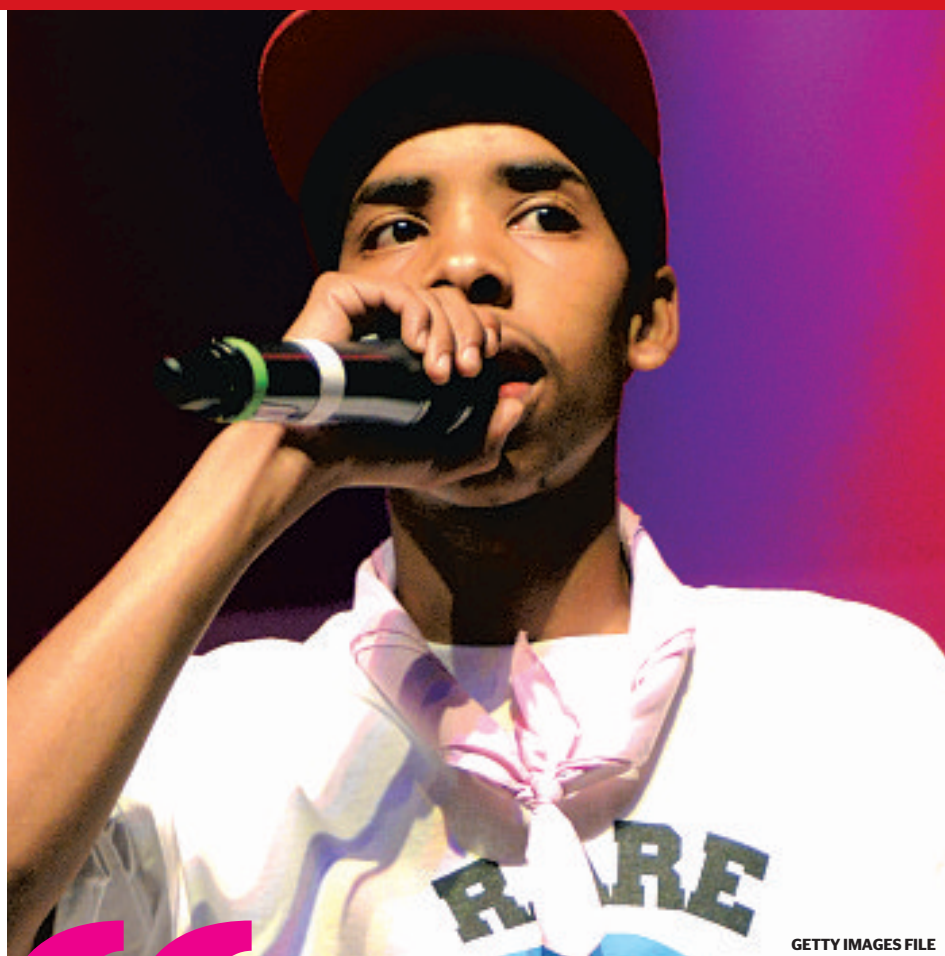

Throughout "Doris" and while I was recording it, you could hear I was apprehensive towards everything. I can't explain it. It wasn't fun; it was like I had to do it. Now it's returning to when it was fun and I can feel myself wanting to do music again. I feel myself getting restless.

There are definitely times on "Doris" you sound more willing to share the spotlight than to take hold of it.

I was still trying to figure out how to rap, and I was absolutely more enthusiastic to share the spotlight than take it completely. There's a whole other set of expectations that come when you get more of the spotlight.

That’s interesting because you missed the part where Odd Future had the build-up. You just came home and had all the lights on you.

And it was fully [bleeped], yeah. Everything was fully blown out. There wasn’t that gradual rise. It went from nothing to popping. I’m used to it now. I’ve had time to adjust to it. I’m a lot more comfortable now than I was when I got home.

Your father is a respected poet. Did you inherit your love of language from him?

Part of it, yes. Both of my parents had me reading at a really young age. Maybe it was a hereditary thing, but my mom always had my nose in a book. I’ve always been a bookworm.

I heard you were really into Edgar Allen Poe as a kid. Did you always have a fascination with the macabre?

I always enjoyed being made uneasy, and I was into anything that was off-putting. I can’t exactly put my finger on why, but it always seemed more exciting than those things that made you feel comfortable.

In a recent interview, you talked about watching global-warming documentaries and said everything was in a dismal state. As you look around now, do you see anything out there that gives you hope?

No, there’s not too much to be hopeful about. With Drake’s album out now, I don’t know what else there is to look forward to. Nothing was the same.

ALBUM REVIEW

Doris
Earl Sweatshirt

* We liked Earl’s debut album so much when we published this review in August, we’re running it again!

By Adam Lukach

REDEYE SOUND BOARD
Listening to Earl Sweatshirt rap makes it easy to remember all of the garbage that came along with being a teenager. Earl, the youngest member of Odd Future—the one who suddenly disappeared to a Samoan boarding school when he was 16—has always been able to talk [bleep] with the best of them, but since his return early last year, his lyrics often have veered toward the personal.

Now 19, Earl has finally released his debut album, “Doris,” a melancholy collection of 15 songs with mood swings befitting the youthful MC’s outlook. One minute he launches into OF’s punky sadism; the next he convinces his mom that he’s doing OK and, yes, he’s taking this seriously.

Sonically, it might not sound that way: Earl’s delivery is slow and slouched, his rhymes somber and his production, mostly done on his own, sounds stilted and uneasy, like that of DOOM or Madlib. In that sense, “Doris” almost sounds like a mixtape, especially the way it avoids hooks. But Earl’s lurchy boom-bap has never lent itself well to that approach. His growth stays obvious on tracks like “Burgundy,” the gorgeous, Pharrell-produced cut that features what Earl has called his favorite verse ever: “Grandma’s passing/But I’m too busy tryna get this [bleepin’] album cracking to see her/So I apologize in advance if anything should happen/And my priorities [bleeped] up, I know it, I’m afraid I’m going to blow it.”

Earl’s prodigious talent is flashiest when he’s just shooting it with his buddies, like Tyler, The Creator on the screeching “Whoa,” or pitched-down stoner raps like “Guild” with Mac Miller.

“Sunday,” a tremendous but lighter cut with Frank Ocean, focuses on the dark side of their L.A. home. Earl is struggling with his music, and Frank is slamming Chris Brown, but the song’s outro captures “Doris’” essential attitude—a special kind of youthful, defiant vibe that beautifully struggles as much with the world around Earl as with his place in it.

Scary for the wrong reasons, “All the Boys Love Mandy Lane” would have been a misguided and ugly horror movie had it arrived when it was finished in 2006. Now, it’s a lethargic effort that leaves only bloodshed where a character study should have been.

Amber Heard (“Machete Kills,” “The Playboy Club”) stars as Mandy Lane, a high school junior whose summer transformation into maximum hotness practically causes male and female classmates to pop out their eyes and shout, “Ah-ooh-gal!” Surrounded by swarming admirers, this girl is a human flytrap.

She’s not interested in juvenile advances, though, and one desperate suitor pays with his life when Mandy’s pal Emmet (Michael Welch) pressures him to impress her by leaping from a roof. Nine months later, Mandy’s removed herself from Emmet and heads to an isolated ranch house to hang with bitchy hotties and the dudes who want to sleep with them. Commence beer stealing and wandering on field-adjacent roads that anyone who’s seen “The Texas Chainsaw Massacre” should fear.

Director Jonathan Levine eventually learned how to connect to his material, delivering hits with “50/50” and “Warm Bodies.” With “Mandy Lane,” his first feature, Levine appears unaware that horror movies are supposed to have tension and momentum. Instead, he and writer Jacob Forman subscribe to the genre’s typical punishment of sexual behavior and then totally detach and desensitize while hinging on an unnecessary plot development.

At first, “Mandy Lane” suggests a savvy portrait of adolescence—that just because people change on the outside doesn’t mean they have to do so on the inside. Unfortunately, what follows focuses not on social development but a troubling fixation on gun violence. Serious and brainless is always a big problem for horror, and “Mandy Lane” tiptoes around harmless before jumping into offensive.

ROMANCE PLANET

BY JENNIFER SHEPHERD | READ MORE AT LIPSTICKMYSTIC.COM

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23

The moon is showing you that your charms are appreciated by multiple parties. You're receiving calls right and left from people who want to get to know you better. Chances are you're still at least somewhat involved with somebody else.

Aries March 21-April 19

You're hitting a comfortable groove. Either things are going great with your long-term honey or you're enjoying intense levels of fun with a new lover. Either way, Venus is helping you make those sensual dreams come true.

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21

Friendly Mars will cheer you up. You've been down in the dumps, wondering if the romance thing will ever come together. But instead of worrying about other people's feelings, focus on feeling good about yourself.

Taurus April 20-May 20

Be clear about your desires. Mars is telling you to hold nothing back. If you've been lusting after a very-married friend, let him or her know what you want. If you're hoping your honey will be open to a threesome, make it happen.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21

Creative energy is strong for you, thanks to Uranus. Be more inventive in the bedroom. Don't just stick to that same old dinner-and-a-movie dating routine. Stage a hot seduction at your place along with a spicy, home-cooked meal.

Gemini May 21-June 21

Venus is not making things easy for you. You lined up a hot date three weeks ago and had to re-schedule it. You thought you met a soul mate and confessed your love, and you had a door slammed in your face. Things will get better.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19

Work is keeping you busy, and it's hard to find time to play. Mars is reminding you that you need to make room in your schedule for some sexy adventures. Don't neglect your lover too much, or you just might lose him or her.

Cancer June 22-July 22

A sensitive moon has you day-dreaming about the one who got away. You remember that hunky and passionate guy. But you forget he was a racist idiot. You recall those tender times with that nice girl. But you forget that she was psycho. Wake up.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 1

You're drawn to two people. Air signs like you are happiest dating multiple partners at once. The moon is creating moments of intense flirtation with one person, but you still have strong emotions for somebody else.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22

A funky lunar eclipse is urging you to reconsider your options. Before you elope with that guy you met online, at least meet him in person for coffee. Don't assume reality will conform with the day-dream zone.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20

As Mars moves opposite your sign, you could be feeling pessimistic about love. You thought you were with a soul mate, but things ended. Or you were hoping to enter into a commitment with your current honey, but he or she is being shy. Be patient.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22

Your first impressions might not be so accurate, thanks to a moon opposition. You might think a guy you meet is The One, only to find out that six other women think he's The One and are dating him at the same time.

TODAY IN THE YEAR...

1912: Former President Theodore Roosevelt, campaigning for the presidency on the Bull Moose ticket, was shot in the chest by a New York saloonkeeper in Milwaukee; Roosevelt gave his scheduled speech anyway.
1933: Germany left the League of Nations.
1990: Composer-conductor Leonard Bernstein died in New York; he was 72.

winner said she gets uncomfortable seeing herself on film and TV.

"I want to crawl under a table or chair," Hudson said Friday on the red carpet at the Chicago International Film Festival at AMC River East 21 (where her "The Inevitable Defeat of Mister & Pete" director George Tillman Jr. was presented with the Black Perspectives award). "As an actress, you're shy about those things. It's like being nude."

Hudson did, however, admit she was excited to watch herself in "The Inevitable Defeat," in which she plays a heroin-addicted prostitute and mother. The film revolves around two boys forced to fend for themselves for an entire summer in the projects in Brooklyn. "I was shocked because I didn't know what to expect," Hudson said of her reaction to watching herself in the movie, which hit theaters Friday. "I didn't know how it was going to turn out. I was holding my breath like, 'OK, what did I do? What's going to happen?'" It was exciting and fun at the same time to see myself in a different light. It was refreshing.

Hudson next can be seen in the Christmas musical "Black Nativity," due out Nov. 27. Meanwhile, her third studio album, featuring the single "I Can't Describe (The Way I Feel)" with rapper T.I., is tentatively scheduled to be released early next year.

George Tillman Jr. originally wanted to film "The Inevitable Defeat" in Chicago, but he said he and his longtime producing partner, Robert Teitel, opted for Brooklyn because of the lack of housing projects in Chicago. Now the Columbia College alums have their sights set on filming a different movie in Chicago—where they also shot "Soul Food" and "Barbershop," among other movies—and production could begin as early as next year. The untitled movie centers on a struggling songwriter who returns home and assists a group of at-risk youth with their annual talent show.

Reality stars grow up so fast! Lauren Conrad announced Sunday that she and boyfriend William Tell are engaged. "I am beyond thrilled!" Conrad blogged, adding in a plug worthy of any savvy reality TV star: "Get ready for lots more wedding content [on my blog] as we begin the planning process." Conrad's happy news came a day after her old on-screen boyfriend, Jason Wahler, tied the knot with model Ashley Slack. And that's not all! Here's more celebrity wedding and engagement news you didn't know you need to know:

Pharrell Williams married longtime girlfriend Helen Lasichanh on Saturday in Miami, billboard.com reports.

Ginnifer Goodwin, who plays Snow White on the ABC show "Once Upon a Time," became engaged last week to the show's Prince Charming, Josh Dallas, people.com reports.

"Mad Men" star Ben Feldman married Michelle Mulitz over the weekend in Gaithersburg, Md., usmagazine.com reports.

Grey area

Just when the 50 shades of casting drama seemed over, Universal Pictures and Focus Features announced Saturday that Charlie Hunnam had dropped out of "Fifty Shades of Grey," deadline.com reported. The "Sons of Anarchy" star's "immersive TV schedule" was cited as the reason for his departure. Suuuuure it is.
